

AMBASSADOR NOTE

Preparation before privilege.

— DAVID JOHNSON

Swipe →

At a pre-college summer program at Rice, the conversation eventually turned to the $1,500 stipend each of us was about to receive.

Most of us had never held that much money at once.

Most of us were first-generation or low-income. Only a few had ever saved or managed money.

Research stipends worth thousands.
Work–study. Part–time jobs. And still,
many students feel unprepared to manage any of it.

Concerning.
Unpredictable.
Unsustainable.

THE CYCLE IS

Earn.

Spend.

Wait for the next stipend.

And it is dangerously easy to carry into adult life after graduation.

HIGH SCHOOL

Room for questionable spending,
with a dependable line of support and advice behind you.

COLLEGE

The support is still there, but less active and less immediate. And college is not simply an extension of high school.

More money is not the solution. The student becomes a consumer rather than a strategy manager.

DAVID JOHNSON · FINMANGO AMBASSADOR

Why shouldn't there be preparation for handling this kind of privilege?

Before a new journey, main characters get tools for what's ahead. Incoming students deserve the same. Workshops, or at the very least structured lectures.

Not just to succeed in class. To start building their own inheritance.

David Johnson

FINMANGO AMBASSADOR • RICE UNIVERSITY

FINMANGO.ORG/POSTS