

AMBASSADOR NOTE

The best investment I made had no paycheck

VARSHA TULSANI

FinMango

Swipe →

I used to think financial health could be measured. A salary. A savings account. Every bill paid on time.

Then I was laid off.

For months after, financial health meant one number: the balance in my bank account.

WHAT I KEPT ASKING

How long will my savings last?

WHAT I STARTED ASKING

What can I build while I'm here?

That question changed everything.

- Leadership programs
- New skills
- Volunteering
- Writing, every week
- People who kept me moving

None of it came with a paycheck. Some days it came with no visible results either.

The most valuable investment I made wasn't financial. It was investing in my ability to adapt.

VARSHA TULSANI • FINMANGO AMBASSADOR

Students and young professionals keep telling me the same thing. They are not asking how to earn more. They are asking where to begin.

Their challenge isn't ambition. It's access.

FINANCIAL LITERACY

Teaches us how money works.

FINANCIAL HEALTH

Asks whether people can navigate life with confidence, resilience, and support when circumstances change.

Sometimes the return shows up long after the investment.

Varsha Tulsani

FINMANGO AMBASSADOR

FINMANGO.ORG/POSTS